

Migrating Spaces and Tourism MigraTouriSpace

MigraTouriSpace is an artistic examination of travelling as an approach to the phenomena of migration and tourism.

The products of spatial imagination not only mutually influence migration and tourism as a mobility continuum, but also drive developments of new urban areas.

Through case studies on the Vietnamese wholesale centre Dong Xuan Center in Berlin Lichtenberg and the German village Dogil Maeul in South Korea, the artist Stefanie Bürkle and her interdisciplinary team investigated the tension between post-tourist practices and the migration of culturally coded spatial contexts, also in light of pandemic-related emptiness.

ABOUT THE PROJECT

Migrating Spaces are spaces that roam with people when they migrate. Tourism no longer refers to vacation as an exceptional state, but to the tourist's gaze, which has been taken back home and has long since shaped what we call everyday life.

The results of the artistic research are presented in a walk-in spatial installation consisting of videos, mappings and photo-wallpapers, providing surprising insights into the diverse spatial overlapping of migration and tourism.

For the visitor, the exhibition becomes a journey of images, people and spaces. Large photo-wallpapers lead into a walk-through multi-channel video projection and interview recordings reveal people's multi-layered relationship to migrating spaces and tourism. The work questions conventional perceptions of tourism and migration and one's own view on what is supposedly foreign.

In connection with the exhibition, the book MigraTourSpace will be published, with photographs, texts and mappings.
